REFLECTION:

The parable of the Good Samaritan is far more relevant today than ever before. How many people lie wounded by the roadside of life? Their wounds are not always visible. Many of today's deepest wounds are invisible. They are not physical and do not therefore show on the outside. People can be wounded in spirit. Perhaps there are such people on my street, if not in my own house: a depressed man who has lost his wife, a man who, having worked all his life, is now suddenly redundant, a deserted wife and mother, lonely kids, forgotten old people... all waiting quietly there, may not having the courage to call out, longing for the good Samaritan. Is my heart big enough to embrace even one of these?

“We must humbly admit that, like the priest and the Levite who did not stop to care for the wounded man, most of us are today overcautious about getting involved. Getting involved is indeed a messy business. We never know what troubles we may have to face if we decide to answer a cry for help. It is far safer, easier and more convenient to close our heart and quietly go to the other side of the road. And we often do that.

Although we are still waiting in expectation, the first sign of the new earth and the new heaven are already visible in the community of faith where the compassionate God reveals Himself. This is the foundation of our faith, the basis of our hope and the source of our love.”
