REFLECTION:

The practice of looking for and maintaining honour under the rule of reciprocity is reflected-and censured-in today's Gospel. Jesus speaks of how guests choose places of honour at table; of a list of guests drawn up according to bonds of friendship, family ties, or economic status. He then urges his elite audience to reject such a norm.

In truth Jesus' criticism of the social convention is not to be understood as a general prohibition of inviting friends and relatives. Jesus himself is a guest at the wedding at Cana; he and his mother are probably relatives of the bride or the groom. There are legitimate reasons for inviting kinsfolk and neighbours for celebration. What is to be avoided is selfishness, which excludes the less fortunate people and the expectations of the reward that comes with reciprocity.

Jesus urges his audience to extend their hospitality to new groups: the poor, the crippled, the lame, the blind. These are the people who are on the fringes of or outside the community. By Jewish law, they are also considered unclean. Jesus' host who is a Pharisee, and the latter's guests who may also be Pharisees, consider themselves "separated" from these people. The challenge of Jesus therefore is more acute: they must go beyond not only the lines of kinship and close alliance, but also the lines of purity which are important to them.

Ultimately, the reason behind this change of ethos is the host of the eternal banquet: God.

The kingdom of heaven is the only banquet that counts. To sit at that banquet is the greatest honour one can have. To miss out on that banquet is the greatest tragedy. The people at the margins of society who are treated as unclean have a powerful patron: God. To include them in a table fellowship here on earth is to assure oneself of a place of honour in heaven.
